

Forth Naturalist and Historian, Stirling City Archaeologist Murray Cook and The Engine Shed are jointly hosting a Forth Valley Heritage Forum for local societies across the Forth Valley district. The aim is to bring together local societies with an interest in the historic environment to discuss sharing of best practice, joint projects and cross publicity, and joint funding. We would like to invite you to have your contribution to this afternoon event.

Our proposed time and date is 1400 -1700 on Monday 5th of March 2018. Our venue is The Engine Shed, Historic Environment Scotland's Building Conservation Centre in Stirling.

The format is simple. We are calling for presentations from colleagues in local heritage bodies and institutions to talk about the role of their organisations, any resources they hold which may be of use to local societies, and what practical assistance they might offer local societies.

We would like to ask you to give a 5 minute presentation on your organisation's role, how you currently work with local communities, and how you might be able to assist local societies in their projects and research.

The afternoon will close with a brief discussion about local heritage societies' needs and possible future events/activities for the forum, which may be of interest.
